

Amino Green 365 Pellets Review – by Ollie Pearce

As the name suggests, this pellet is ideal for year-round use and more importantly, is also fully digestible in all water temperatures, partly due to the naturally low oil content. The inclusion of products like wheat germ is vital, particularly so when the temperatures drop as baits can still be utilised by the fish, meaning they are unlikely to become 'full' and will therefore continue to feed around your hookbait.

The natural appearance of these pellets is another plus point as a baited area won't look quite as blatant to both wary fish and problematic birdlife alike.

As with many pellets, their pulling power can be boosted considerably with liquid foods such as Feedstim XP or Bloodworm Extract and a little Salmon Oil is well worth a go in the warmer months, too. Coat the pellets the night before you intend to use them to allow them time to absorb the liquid. A small percentage of them can also be added to stick mixes in order to separate and break down a compact groundbait mix.

The 4mm size of these pellets means that they can be used to construct golf ball sized PVA mesh bags with ease and their relatively quick breakdown time combined with a unique, natural appeal due to the Spirulina inclusion will draw fish to your hookbait when times are tough. To add another natural twist to your armoury, use them alongside Frozen Water Snails and any of the bloodworm products – ideal during the winter when nature's finest food supply is thin on the ground!
